

Leveragable or Under-utilized Assets	Environment- Competition-Market	Opportunity (Obstacle)
1. Skills	1. Pain to Avoid	1. Target
2. Expertise	2. Gain to Get	2. Investment
3. Customer Base	3. Frustration	3. Risk
4. Knowledge	4. Definition of "Success"	4. Customers you have vs. Customers you want
5. Network	5. Competitive Weakness	5. Segmentation
6. Testimonials	6. Reason to Switch	6. Communicate
7. Bell Cow	7. DIFFERENCE that makes the Difference	7. Resources
8. Access to Influence	8. "GAP" (Customer Frustration & Competition)	8. Priorities
9. Alliances	9. Needs	9. Manpower/Skill
10. Referrals	10. Concerns	10. Org. Structure
11. Capacity	11. Fears	11. Expert
12. Core Competence	12. Friction	12. Returns/Results
13. Brand/Reputation	13. "Birds of a Feather..."	13. Core Activities
14. Excess Resources	14. Chunk or Segments	14. Non-Core Activities
15. Competitive Strength	15. Decision Makers	15. Clear positioning statement and compelling promise
Think/Analyze/Question	Ask/Probe/Listen	Opportunity without Structure is Chaos. What is the "structure" I need to take advantage of the opportunity I see?

We are presenting our product or service to far more people than are buying. Finding out why people don't buy from us is probably THE most important question we can ever get answered. We then know what to change to turn the no or maybe into a yes.... or we find out these people are not our target.... either way, it is a win.

The mistake most business owners make is they keep expanding the size of their mailing lists, look for new markets to flog their product to, read books on techniques to increase the closing percentage and initiate a social media and search engine optimization program in hopes of boosting sales instead of finding out why the people they are currently talking to aren't buying.... Dumb! Until the underlying reasons for the “NO” have been identified, we are a scratch looking for an itch and doomed to brute force and “whack-a-mole” marketing, both of which are prescriptions for being tired instead of rich.

You have managed to convert some portion of the audience from a “No” into a “YES!”... or maybe it’s a “yes?”. Business is not a bathrobe: One size does not fit all. Different market segments have different considerations. The questions you must answer are:

Unsold Buyer (NO):

1. What Risks does the unsold buyer perceive that are preventing them from making the switch? (How can you give them “Certainty of Success”?)
2. What Friction points does the unsold buyer have that are preventing them from buying?
3. What is the DIFFERENCE that makes the DIFFERENCE to the unsold buyer?
4. How (specifically) does the unsold buyer define “Success”?

Buyers (Yes):

1. Why did these people say yes?
2. What must happen to keep them coming back for seconds?
3. What must happen for them to become addicted and refer?

I love what Peter Drucker says: “If the marketing is done right, selling becomes unnecessary.” Mr. Drucker defined marketing as figuring out the red-hot, searing pain and offering a product or service that solves that alleviates the pain and solves the problem. Aspirins sell them self.