

Talking about prototyping business models is easy but applying the principles of prototyping is more difficult. Let's start with a simple, but challenging exercise.

For this exercise, you have exactly six minutes to sketch out three alternative business models for the same starting point -- a business that makes use of two key resources, a bicycle and $1,000. In other words, each one of the three alternative business models should be built around the bicycle and $1,000 as a resource.

To do this exercise:

- Make sure you have a Canvas and sticky notes handy.
- Set your timer to six minutes.
- Sketch out your first model.
- When you're done, throw away your first idea by taking away all the sticky notes.
- Start with your second model.
- Repeat!